

FIGURES OF TRADE

The general tone of the market last week was dull although prices were a little stronger as the close of business. The floods in the west and a scarcity of stock in the country had a depressing effect on produce and grain. Wheat, corn and oats declined in outside markets. Sugars were firm and closed higher. The petroleum trade was undisturbed and a tendency to lower prices was reported. Lumber was in better request from some eastern factories, but hides were positively dead and will remain in that condition until the eastern tanneries resume business. Wool is in light demand, owing to scarcity of stock here. Weather has delayed shipping and shipments. Exports of wheat from the United States last week were smaller than those for any week since July, 1891. It has finally become evident that there was no "shortage" in the world's crop of food grains in 1891, and according to competent foreign observers the only thing upon which to rely for higher prices in the near future is the fact that they have been unwarrantably low, at least that they ought to be. It is almost entirely to be expected that unless the weather becomes more unfavorable to bread crops than it has been no great encouragement to quotations is likely in the near future. Money was cheaper in New York and lower rates for various classes of accommodations were quoted. The large gains reported in cash holdings indicated that interior banks were sending their unused money to New York. Quotations for silver bars were slightly lower at the close of the week, though the movement of the market was insignificant and the changes fractional. This was due to the somewhat larger offerings of bullion. Wheat in the local market opened at 96 cents and closed Saturday at 95. The produce market was fluctuating and closed weaker than for any week this season. Sugar closed a shade higher and Michigan cheese declined. Meats were marketed in small quantities by local producers, but quotations were moderately easy with no change noted.
